Buzkashi

1 Buzkashi is an ancient sport from the mountains of Central Asia. People play it from the village of Ulupamir in Turkey to the cold, dry steppes of China where the Uighur people live. The word buzhashi means 'goat-pulling' in Farsi. It is a winter-spring sport, played from November to April.

2 Buzkashi is played on horseback with two teams of five riders. The riders try to pick up a dead goat, carry it around a flag, and drop it in a circle called the Circle of Justice. (If that doesn't sound nice, don't forget that most sports use balls made of leather.) A successful drop is one point. The teams play two halves of forty-five minutes each, like football. It is fast and dangerous. The riders carry whips for hitting their horses—and other riders. Because of this, they wear heavy clothes to protect themselves. In Afghanistan, where buzhashi is the most popular, they wear old Russian army helmets, too.

3 Buzhashi began among the Turkic people of Central Asia. The cultures, traditions, and languages in this part of the world are quite similar. If you can speak Kazakh, for example, you can understand about 60% of Uzbek. The Turkic people moved across Central Asia in the 10th century, bringing buzhashi with them. However, the sport is probably much older than that.

4 Buzhashi is very, very difficult to play. The best riders are more than forty years old, and they have played all of their lives. The horse is also very important. People say, 'A bad rider on a good horse is better than a good rider on a bad horse.' The best horses for buzhashi are from northern Afghanistan. There, it is a way of life. Afghans play buzhashi every Friday, and thousands of fans come to watch the competition.

5 In 2017, the first World Championship of buzhashi took place in Astana, the capital of Kazakhstan. Eleven teams, including the home country, Mongolia, and the United States, took part. (The twelfth, Azerbaijan, pulled out at the last minute.) The competition lasted for a week. In the end, Kazakhstan was the winner, downing neighbouring Kyrgyzstan 4-1 in a thrilling final.
